Kennington denied that he had asked logsdon to widen the sprinkling area in any of these conversations, as he had been sprinkling more than he had been paid for. He next saw Logsdon three days after the second bidding. He found him at the publican committee rooms. Logsdon was ne. The witness took to him an affidavit denying the charges made by the other contractors that he had demanded 10 per cent. of the sprinkling payments to give to Logsdon for a campaign fund. Martin M. tract was let?"

"No. sir."
"Did Mr. Logsdon, Mr. Megrew, Mr. Maguire or any other official or politician, or MARION TRACTION LINE. friend of Logsdon's or theirs, tell you that the streets would be widened and the three sprinklings cut out if you gave $500 a month to the campaign fund?"

"Didn't Logsdon tell you he didn't want a cent for himself, but they had to have a big campaign fund to elect Bookwalter?"

Witness admitted having met Fred Fuehring on Court street, near Delaware. This was on Feb. 18. He denied that he had asked Fuehring if he had seen Rust. He also denied that he had asked Fuehring if SUIT he had talked to Rust about the 10 per cent. that was necessary for campaign purposes, and that Fuehring said he would have nothing to do with the transaction. He said the only time he talked to Fuehring was on the night of March 27, when Fuehring and Rust came to Kennington's home and wanted to know if the work was to be sublet, and if not, if he intended to buy the wagons of the others. Witness said he told them he did not have the contract, but might want their wagons if he got it.

HE SAW FUEHRING. "Didn't you see Fuehring the next day in front of the Merchants' National Bank?"

"Yes, sir." "Who was with him?"

"Rust." "Didn't all three of you go to the safety deposit office of the Indiana Trust Com-

"Did you not there refuse to talk to Fuehring if Rust remained, and did you not insist on Rust retiring?" Witness said he had. Rust had retired he offered to give Fuehring certain dis-tricts. He said he did not want to talk be-fore Rust, as he and Rust had "had words." "Didn't you tell Fuehring that what you wanted to talk about was a matter for only four eyes?"

"I did not." have 8 per cent. of the money received?"

"Yes, sir." "What was that for."

"For my trouble Witness defined his "trouble" as being the bond he had to give for the contract. "running around after them when there were complaints" and looking after other matters. He denied that he had told Fuehring Logsdon had come down from 10 per cent. and would accept 8 per cent. from the contractors. He also denied that he had told Fuehring if the other contractors id for the contract himself or that Fu ring said he would not make any deal with Logsdon. He said he thought he ought to have the 8 per cent. for his trouble. He denied, again, the story of $500 a month to Kennington denied he had stopped Fueh-ring on the street and told him that he should enter the arrangement as if he would agree to the 8 per cent. Kennington could assure him 20 per cent. and that if the contractors did not make 20 per cent. there would be no 10 per cent. to pay.

ANOTHER DENIAL. "Didn't you tell Fuehring that you had a letter asking if you were going to keep your promise, and did not Fuehring tell you, when you attempted to show the letter, 'I don't want to see your letter and 1 don't want anything to do with your deal?" "

"Didn't you meet Fuehring in front of 126 East Washington street and ask him to say yes so the 10 per cent. deal could go

"No, sir." Witness denied that Fuehring had told him to "go home and go to bed and stay there and he would make money," or that witness had warned him he would get into trouble. He also denied that Fuehring was angry and talked loud and Kennington tried to calm him so that his words could not be heard. Kennington also denied telling Rust in the Arcade saloon Feb. 10 that if he would go into a 10 per cent. arrangement they would exhaust the appropriation, or that he had explained how the street-sweeping appropriation was being exhausted. He also denied telling Fred Nolting that he could get the contract at $27.50 if they would pay Logsdon $500 a month for five and one-half months, or that Logsdon must have a campaign fund of $100,000 to elect

Bookwalter. He also denied he had said the contractors could have had all of the 1902 appropriation if they had gone into a 10 per cent, arrangement with him. Kennington admitted he had told Rust before the 1903 bidding that he must have 10 per cent. of the payments. Rust had refused to be a party to any 10 per cent. or 8 per cent. arrangements, he said. He admitted talking to Rust and Roepke before the bids were opened Feb. 27. He saw them in the courthouse basement. He first said he asked them then for 10 per cent., but afterward said he had not asked them until after the bids were opened, and he found he was the lowest bidder. The witness appeared confused about this conversation, but finally settled on it as being after the bids were Kennington said no one had suggested the 10 per cent. scheme to him. He said he had not figured what this would amount to, but estimated it at $4,000 to $5,000. He said he wanted this for himself. Chairman Wynne asked the witness questions about the area sprinkled in 1899 and 1902, and elicited the information that it less in 1902 than in 1899. Kennington said the combination was in force in both years. Mr. Shea asked him if affidavits had not been made by the contractors that the work was properly done, and he said there had not been. Affidavits had been made that there was no collusion, however. THE CROSS-EXAMINATION. Mr. Ketcham then began cross-examination. He showed that of the appropriation for 1901-$40,000-all was expended except price was only $17.70, and a great deal of sprinkling was necessary. In 1902, he said, saving of $9,000 in the appropriation-$45,000-although the price was $21. Kennington said he had always been a Democrat and that his father was once a prosecuting attorney, Vern Branigan; chapprominent Democrat, a member of the Council and street commissioner. He said he knew Albert Sahm was a Democrat and a member of the Board of Public Works when he paid him the money contributed by the contractors. He explained the low price in 1901 because the combination had to meet competition. He said John H. Furnas knew before the 1902 bidding that he was to have a part of the work. The combination feared Furnas and let him in. He said Rust had suggested to him that all bid again this year, but witness had told Rust he had decided to bid by himself. The combination had had no meeting in

Mr. Matson also examined the witness about collateral matters. On re-direct examination Kennington said no other member of the combination had ever demanded 10 per cent. of the payments. He answered a question to the effect that he wanted a part of the profits of the "trust" for himself in the affirmative. 'So one year you were with the combination and the next year you forsook your friends and tried to get their profits.' "I tried to get them for myself-yes."

Warren County Suffers from Conflicting Acts of Legislation.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal. LAFAYETTE, Ind., April 24.-Judge Dehart this afternoon perpetually enjoined Judge Rabb, of the Warren county Circuit Court, from holding court between April 27 and May 16, 1903, basing the order of injunction on the conflict of dates in the acts of 1901 and 1903 of the Legislature,

The Legislature passed a bill in 1901 setand the Assembly of 1903 fixed it at a date in conflict with the law passed two years ago. In view of this Charles McAdams, an attorney at Williamsport, who is interested in a trial soon to be held there, sought the cover of an injunction to determine the validity of one act or the other. Judge De-hart granted a restraining order, and the brief is now being prepared for the Supreme Court, whose ruling is soon expected.

Small Hope for a Good Track Team-Commencement Week Plans. Special to the Indianapolis Journal.

FRANKLIN, Ind., April 24.-The outlook for the Franklin College track team for this spring is not very promising. Almost all the probable candidates are members of the baseball team and will not have time and opportunity to train. There is some very good material in the college from which to pick a team, but the opportunities and facilities for training are such as will prevent Franklin holding a high place in the first annual meet of the Indiana College Athletic League, to be held at Richmond on May 16. The inclement weather has prevented outdoor training so far this spring and it is impossible to estimate correctly what can be expected of the team. President Stott announced in chapel Wednesday morning that prospects for an especially good programme commencement week are fine. The senior class has secured Dr. Henderson, of Chicago University, to make the commencement address. The alumni oration will be by Prof. Patterson, of Edinburg.

The prison stands on the crest of the "mountain," inclosed on two sides and part of a third by a high stone wall, the work of the convicts themselves, who appear rather to enjoy building their own cage. About halfway up are the residences of the officials, and yet a little higher up the stables and farm buildings of the institution. As we drove to the warden's house we saw a long line of prisoners marching in single file from the potato field. A couple of guards were in charge, and a mounted man was riding behind. A convict came to take charge of the horses; for a good deal of the outdoor work is done, under careful supervision, by men whose term of imprisonment has nearly expired, and who can therefore be trusted not to attempt to escape. A large proportion of the outdoor work in this agricultural region consists, of course, in farming operations; therefore the convicts raise crops of barley, oats and wheat. Besides this, they grow vegetables, raise pigs, rear cattle and generally are beginning to realize the ideal of the warden in charge that ultimately the penitentiary shall become the great mo province. The returns from this labor largely help to make the prison self-supporting, and the privilege of exercise in the open air is an inducement to good behavior. There is also the usual indoor work-tailoring, bootmaking, etc., all the clothing worn by the convicts being manufactured by them, and even part of that worn by the officials in charge. As a result some prisoners, anxious to reform, who entered the institution unlettered and ignorant of any kind of honest labor, have, on liberation, been able to read and write, and have possessed a good knowledge of some trade. These men now look back on their term of incarceration as a biessing in disguise. The whole place seems to be as clean, tidy and well swept as the deck of a manof-war. The air is extraordinarily fresh and pure, blowing straight off the prairie, and the inmates, though somewhat pale owing to the confinement, present generally an appearance of robust health.

The prisoners generally are a motley crowd. One file I particularly noticed was led by a tall, stout and apparently emi-nently respectable man, looking like a rosperous banker, but he was a cattle thief. Behind him was a Blackfoot Indian, and a little further down the line was a villainous negro, who should have been hanged for facial angle alone, the brought up by an Esquimo murderer, who waddled about like a duck in his efforts to keep step. That poor creature could not speak English, but it would have been interesting to know his ideas of his surroundings. Imagine being dragged off from your peaceful home in a snowcoop, and carried a couple of thousand miles or so to a building made of material you had never seen before; and being locked up with strange black and white and red goblins, and having to wash! It would have been more merciful to hang him, for if he ever does return to his own people he will certainly be killed as a liar. There was a really delightful old gentleman, with white hair and clean-cut, clean-shaven face, who was engaged in laying a flower bed. He looked like a pere noble, and was serving his third term for being what an old English chronicler calls "a coiner of naughty crowns." On the occasion of his last discharge the Roman Catholic archbishop, out of charity, engaged him to look after the furnace used for heating the archepiscopal palace, which was just the kind of job he wanted to enable him to carry on his operations comfortably. His vacation was a short one, however, and to-day he is honestly bent on making the approach to the prison the most picturesque and best kept in Mani-

I was surprised to hear that Indians rarely attempt to get away. As confinement must be so much more irksome to them than to white men, we might expect that they would quickly become desperate, but they seem to be dazed by their surroundings, and cowed by the distance which separates them from their tribe.

Jew I found to be the most versatile man in the empire. If I was 'way up in the corner of Siberia and could not make my wants known it was a Jew who could speak the English or the German that I needed. Was I anxious for an interview with the students of Warsaw or Moscow then I must find a Hebrew boy who spoke English as well as myself. And when I was sent back on a cold, dark night some seventy miles to have my passport vised, and was unable to get my ticket or to make inquiries, it was a poor Jewish artisan who stayed up half the night with me, paid my ticket, gave me half of his scanty fare and put me on my train for Warsaw. Russia has between four million and five million Jews, or about one-third of the entire race. Poland alone contains over eight hundred thousand. In England and America the Jews have cast off all distinguishing badges, and in Great Britain some of them stand near to the King. In Russia it is totally different; they are almost as distinctive as a Chinaman is here. The Russian Jew wears a curious curl that hangs down to his chin.
